¶1. (C) Summary: Iraq's Interior Minister, Bayan Jabr, seemed to take his lead from the Iranians at the July 18-19 meeting of Iraq's neighbors' interior ministers. Jabr annoyed the Turks by ignoring their advice to steer clear of the press, especially on the PKK issue; his private assurances to the Turks on PKK were disappointing to the Turks. According to the Turkish MFA, Jabr failed to call out Syria or any other neighbors for supporting the insurgency, at least in the plenary session. The ministers tasked Turkey to draft a "multilateral protocol in the field of security." Saudi Arabia will host the next meeting; timing is undecided but our contact guessed the meeting would be in early 2006. Full text of communique in para. 8. End summary.

¶2. (C) On July 20, PolMilCouns and PolMilOff called on MFA Director General for Security Affairs Hayati Guven to get a readout of the July 18-19 meeting of Iraq's neighbors' interior ministers (senior officials met July 18, the ministerial itself was on the 19th). Guven shared with us a copy of the communique (text in para. 8) and noted that Turkey (which proposed the idea) has been tasked to draft a "multilateral protocol in the field of security" for the next interior ministers' meeting; Guven said the protocol would not only cover terrorism but also drug trafficking, organized crime, and mutual legal assistance. Saudi Arabia will host the next neighbors' meeting, which Guven surmised would be in early 2006.

¶3. (C) Guven reported that the Iranians had proposed--and the Iraqis seconded--a permanent secretariat for the neighbors' interior ministers process. Guven termed this idea "not very appealing;" he did not see the need to institutionalize the current arrangement, which he thought was more appropriately temporary. He admitted that the Iraqi minister's support put Turkey in a difficult position, so he feels himself obligated to at least discuss this proposal in the draft protocol.

¶4. (C) Guven stated candidly that the Iraqi Minister, Bayan Jabr (SCIRI), "created a lot of problems for us." He noted that Jabr enthusiastically seconded every Iranian proposal. According to Guven, Turkey and many of the other neighbors were reluctant to forcefully challenge these proposals because they wanted to appear supportive of the Iraqis. The Iranians were especially focused on adding a statement to the communique that the process of bringing Saddam and other former regime leaders responsible for crimes against the Iraqi people "and war crimes against Iran and Kuwait" must be accelerated. Guven noted that even the Kuwaitis were not pushing this kind of language, but the ministers agreed to add the paragraph under Iranian and Iraqi pressure.

¶5. (C) Guven said the Turks had strongly advised Jabr's delegation to deal carefully with the press; instead, the minister called a press conference immediately upon his arrival and held two more during his short visit. The Turks were especially concerned that Jabr be cautious about answering questions on the PKK issue, which has been all over the news in recent days (see refs a and b). Jabr pained the Turks by announcing the upcoming PKK trilateral talks (which the Turks had hoped to keep quiet--ref c) and by candidly stating that the Iraqi government really does not control northern Iraq, where the PKK is active. He added that the Iraqi parliament would have to approve any cross-border operation against the terrorist group.

¶6. (C) Jabr further annoyed the Turks by providing little reassurance on the PKK to Turkish Interior Minister Aksu during their bilateral. According to Guven (who sat in), Jabr said that only after the constitutional drafting process, referendum and December elections for a new legislature, the new parliament may/may adopt "a declaration" stating that Iraq does not want any such terrorist group to reside there. (NOTE: This is far weaker than the positive rhetoric PM Ja'afari offered on his recent visit to Ankara (ref d). END NOTE.)

17. (C) Guven reported that in the Jabr-Aksu bilateral, the Iraqi minister did mention terrorists crossing into Iraq from Syria, Iran, Saudi Arabia, and Jordan, but added "it is difficult to blame those governments for this." According to Guven, Minister Jabr mentioned no countries by name during the ministerial meeting, thus missing an opportunity to send a strong message to unhelpful neighbor regimes.
